A SMTP Server Guaranteed To Work

Free SMTP Server List - SMTP Servers

THE ORIGINAL SMTP SERVER LIST - STARTED IN 2003 AND MUCH COPIED Whether you are going to be forwarding on mail from a POP3 account or just want to send a regular old e-mail you will need a SMTP server to do the forwarding. Most servers are provided free from the service provider but some like Yahoo make you pay. Detailed below is a searchable list of SMTP servers for various ISP and E-Mail providers. In order to avoid any chance of problems when using Easy Email Forwarding we would strongly recommend using the corresponding SMTP server to the POP3 server which holds your account i.e. the account you are forwarding from. In other words if you want to forward from your Hotmail account it's always best to first try using the Hotmail SMTP server, you don't have to but it's best. This is even more important in 2017 for guaranted deliverability!

Besides using your mail providers or ISP's SMTP server a number of services are available that will allow you to use their server no matter where in the world you are, we recommend the SMTP2Go Worldwide SMTP Server (also great for travellers). This service will allow you to send e-mails without worrying about where in the world you are or what ports your ISP (or internet gateway at the time) may be blocking. This really is quite a common problem and a number of ISPs restrict outbound mail to their server over port 25. I know it sounds complicated but as a user you only notice a problem when your laptop or portable device refuses to send your mail. The SMTP2Go service gets around this in a very simple way and allows you to use the same settings for your e-mail in every program and on every device, no matter where you are.

Finally we understand that some businesses may be looking for a SMTP server to use in order to e-mail their subscribed mailing list? Simply put we would strongly recommend that you don't use any mission critial mail server for this! Even if your subscriber list is exlusively opt-in it is still possible for you to encounter issues and possible black listing. For small scale operators we recommend SMTP2GO again, simply put because their extra reporting (Feedback Loops, Blacklist Monitoring, Spamtrap Detection, Bounce Tracking, Real-Time Analytics

Still can't find the server you are looking for? We recommend a service called SMTP2Go. They can supply you with authentication details for their SMTP server which will allow you to send e-mails from anywhere in the world, from any device that supports SMTP (Laptops, PDA's, iPhone, Android devices etc). You keep your existing e-mail addresses and just use their server to do the sending, it's as simple as that.

Why The Need For A List Of SMTP Servers?

In an ideal world a list of SMTP servers like the one above would not be needed. ISP's would take their responsibilities towards providing an e-mail platform seriously and we could all happily e-mail without trouble. SMTP does stand for Simple Mail Transfer Protocol after all. It's not an ideal world and it is ISP's that bring around 99% of the need for this list.

To start of with a large number of ISPs bury the details of their SMTP servers deep within their websites. This either needs a degree in advanced Google or perhaps just blind luck to find. I have no idea why they are so secretive, I assume it has something to do with them believing that it will stop spammers abusing their SMTP servers, something totally not needed as long as they are using authentication.

The next problems are connected. Some ISPs do not allow you to send mail over Port 25 (the port for SMTP) unless it is through one of their servers. They only allow SMTP relay through what they can directly control. This is all fine and dandy except for when they don't make those details easily accessible (see the point above) or when you decide to travel on business or for a vacation. Because when they do this many ISPs also only allow you to send through their SMTP when you connect to the internet using their connection. This means that when you travel you have no way of sending e-mail using their server, the SMTP server that you've been forced to use from home. So you're away on business but when you send an e-mail you get a dreaded "can not send" error message. Your ISP has forced the need for you to have access to another SMTP relay server. The list above helps by providing the SMTP details of many of the free and paid mail services that abound on the internet.

So as you can see the reason for the SMTP Server list is simple, it's to help you find the SMTP server for your ISP/Mail provider and perhaps more importantly to give you options when you are travelling.

How Do I Find The SMTP Server For My ISP?

If your ISP or e-mail provider isn't mentioned in the list of SMTP servers above then it might actually be much easier than you think to find your providers SMTP. Most use a common prefix for their mail server so for example if you were connecting to the internet with myisp.com their mail server would usually be located at mail.myisp.com or smtp.myisp.com or similar (the 3 most common prefixes are email,mail and smtp). All you then need to know is that SMTP servers listen on Port 25, this makes it very easy to see if there is an active SMTP server there using Telnet. Here are some basic instructions (For windows users):-

- 1. Open up the command prompt on your PC by either search for "cmd" or typing "cmd" at the run prompt
- 2. At the command prompt type Telnet mail.myisp.com 25 (assuming we are searching for the SMTP server for myisp.com)
- 3. If you get a response from the SMTP server then congrats, you have just found your server. If you don't then repeat step 2 trying other prefixes (mail etc)

Remember if all else fails SMTP2Go provide a SMTP server that you can use from anywhere and with any mail account. For the sake of a few dollars a years it really does cut all the bother out of sending e-mail, I know we are banging on about it but honestly it's what we use and I can't tell you how many hours it's saved messing around with trying to get messages to go.

Can't Find Your SMTP Server Or Have Found Something Wrong With The List, Please Leave A Comment?

smtpsoftware Mod • a year ago

Standard port numbers are 25 - unsecured. 465 - SSL/TLS but more often than not SSL. 587 - SSL/TLS but should be used for TLS. Using Telnet to any of those ports will tell you if the server is listening. EVERY SMTP server needs authentication so you'll need to provide your own username and password for every server you want to use.

NEAL • 9 months ago

okay I have a list of 5 million closer to 6 million, @Thunder SMTP 20 thousand a month isn't going to do me much good,

I would like to send at least 100 thousand at 25 thousand a week or more if need be, I dont think there is a free SMTP server for that, Who out there has a free trial version that doesn't limit you in trial version to 100 emails, who has the trial version that will let you send out unlimited emails for 2 to 5 days, if it proves to be effective and not fake' I will pay the yearly or monthly fee, Tell me which smtp server really wants my business...Lets make it happen, email me at nlolin1964@yahoo.com

Thunder SMTP • a year ago

Like Bob said that's useless information. Just list with server addresses without any point. We offer SMTP with 20k free emails monthly. Ideal for small business and individuals. Using a free SMTP or public mail is ridiculous, the reputation will be bad and the limitations too much. If someone is interested check at https://thundersmtp.com

Crystal Mixing and Mastering • 2 years ago

Where are the rest of the server details? ie, User, Password, Port Number etc?

Bob Bobster → Crystal Mixing and Mastering • a year ago

Great question. Info is useless without authentication credentials.

Crystal Mixing and Mastering → Bob Bobster • 10 months ago

Jajja. nom nom. GOod day my good sir. Spiffing.
